Omaha, Neb – This St. Patrick's Day, nearly 3,500 local students will share the spotlight with the Omaha Symphony! Playing recorders, string instruments, and singing, young learners will get to experience the thrill of working together to perform live music.

Carnegie Hall Communities LinkUP! concerts are the culmination of months of education and practice. Teachers were first trained on the curriculum in the fall. Since then, classroom instruction has helped the 4th-6th grade students improve their performing, creating, and listening skills. Now it's time for these talented kids to showcase what they've learned through these special interactive performances with the Omaha Symphony!

"Omaha Symphony education programs aim to make students active participants in their learning. This program epitomizes that philosophy," said Jennifer Boomgaarden, vice-president of
